A: The issue was the Wordpress plugin enable the adblock. I just disabled it and it's working fine. Maruta is a type of traditional Japanese decorative art in which a ceramic bowl is filled with fragrant ointment and placed on an easel, thus resembling flowers. The word "maruta" comes from the words, and, and in the origin, "maruta" refers to "weeping". Varieties Kitaodori, with its great height, is used for funerals. Takagimai: Small, thin, round maruta which have a wide base like a pot. These are used for bringing the offerings to ancestors. Chindou: Small, flat, thin maruta decorated with sakura. Marutas usually appear in Japanese festivities. During traditional Japanese weddings, marutas are used to bring wishes for the newlyweds, and during New Year's celebrations, they are filled with wishes for prosperity and good fortune, and placed in niches in the eaves of one's home. In Shinto shrine rituals, It is an essential part of Shinto religious rites, and a flower holder of traditional origins may be used for Maruta. In Japan, the two types of flower holders traditionally used for Maruta are the Chindou and the Kitaodori. See also Japanese decorative art References Further reading Maruta at J-Town Stories. ``` myApp.controller('AccountController', function($scope,$location) { $scope.logout = function() { console.log('redirecting to home'); $location.path('/home'); $scope.showMessage = true; }; $scope.logout(); }); So my question is: f678ea9f9e
